Where the damage is.

11,856 verified storm-hit addresses, every one traced to a National Weather Service hail report. 213 of them have a phone number that is not DNC-flagged.

Read this before you build a schedule. DFW has had no qualifying hail since September 27. Nobody is chasing fresh damage right now, and that is the opportunity: these are homes hit between April and September that still have not been inspected, and most Texas policies put a filing deadline on the date of loss. You are not early. You are the last call before the window shuts.

This is a door operation, not a call floor. Only 213 of 11,856 addresses are legally dialable after the DNC scrub, under a day of work for one setter. The other 11,643 are door-knock only. Staff accordingly, and put skip-trace budget against the biggest storm days before hiring a second phone.

“Dallas County” is how the appraisal district labels parcels outside a named city boundary. Work it off the map in the tool, not the label.

April 28 produced 4.5-inch hail, softball size. A roof under that stone is not a repair conversation. 3,716 of those homes are still unworked.

HOW TO WORK IT

- Knockers start here: Fort Worth, Arlington, and Benbrook off April 26 (up to 3″), then the April 28 belt: Rockwall, Royse City, Southlake, Keller, Hurst, Richardson, Rowlett.
- Setters start here: Fort Worth (93 dialable), Dallas County (45), Commerce (33), Azle (22). That is the whole list. Burn it, then knock.
- Always open with the date and the stone size for that address. Pull it from the tool. “Storms in your area” is a telemarketer. “Two and a half inch hail on April 26” is a neighbor.
- Mark every outcome in the tool the same day, or your teammate knocks the same door next week. That is how a company earns a reputation it doesn't want.

REFRESHING THIS BOARD

The storm feed runs hourly and target generation runs with it, so new hail appears on its own. To regenerate this sheet with current numbers, run `python3 print/sales/_build_territory.py` with the production Supabase keys in the environment, then re-render the PDFs.
