The door. Ten seconds, one question, one booking.

You are not selling a roof. You are booking a free inspection on a house the National Weather Service says got hit. The app shows you the date and the stone size for that street. Lead with them.

BEFORE YOU KNOCK

- Your permit for this city is in your pocket. No permit, no knocking in that city.
- Open the Map tab and tap Near me. Knock the houses with a dark ring first: those are priority.
- Tap the house, then Roof and storms. Know its hail date and stone size before you walk up.
- No Soliciting sign: walk past. Don't knock, don't leave anything.
- Knock only inside the city's hours. Your Getting started checklist lists them for each city.

THE OPEN (FIRST TEN SECONDS)

> You: "Hi, I'm {{YOUR NAME}} with PowerEdge. I'm not selling anything today. The weather service logged {{SIZE}}-inch hail on this street on {{DATE}}, and we're checking roofs on this block this week. Has anybody been up on yours since then?"

Then stop talking. A real date and a real stone size is why this works. "Storms in the area" is what every other knocker says.

WHERE IT GOES

THEY SAY	YOU SAY
"No, nobody's looked at it."	"That's most people. Hail bruises shingles. You can't see it from the yard and it doesn't leak right away. Our inspector gets on the roof, photographs everything, and gives you the answer in writing, even if it's 'your roof is fine.' It's free and takes about 30 minutes. What's better, {{DAY}} afternoon or {{DAY}} morning?"
"Someone already looked."	"Good. Did they get on the roof, and did they leave you anything in writing?" No to either: offer the inspection. Yes to both: thank them and move on.
"We already replaced it."	"Then you're set. Have a good one." Log it: Said no, Already replaced.
"Is this going to cost me?"	"The inspection is free, no obligation. If there's storm damage and you decide to file, your cost on a covered claim is your deductible. That's state law."
"Do you work for my insurance?"	"No. We're a roofing company. If you file, you file your own claim. We document what we find."
"Can you help with the deductible?"	"Nobody can, legally. Your deductible is yours to pay. If that ever becomes the problem, there are options, and our inspector can walk you through them."

"Are you licensed?"	"Texas doesn't license roofers. We're insured for $2 million, and I'll show you the certificate."
"Not interested."	"Fair enough. Thanks for your time." Log it: Said no, with the reason.

BOOKING AT THE DOOR

1. Tap Book inspection.
2. Pick a window with them. Only windows a closer is free for show up, so whatever they pick is real.
3. Confirm the name of the person you spoke to and their phone or email. They get a confirmation.
4. Leave the closer a note: what they told you (a leak, the roof's age, an earlier inspection, who decides).
5. Hand them an appointment card with the day and window written on it.

> Book times they'll keep. You're paid $50 when the inspection is held: the homeowner is home and the closer finishes it. A booking nobody shows up for pays nothing and costs the closer an hour.

LOG EVERY DOOR

TAP	WHEN
Not home	Nobody answered. Leave a door hanger.
Come back	They asked you to return, or the decision-maker isn't home. Set the time.
Said no	Pick the reason. It tells the team which streets are done.

The app's record of who booked each inspection decides who gets paid on that roof. A door you don't log is a door nobody can credit to you.

> Never at the door: offer to cover, waive or "work with" a deductible · say insurance will buy them a new roof · say you'll file or handle their claim · call PowerEdge a licensed roofer · knock in a city where you don't hold the permit · sign anyone up for texts (they use the Storm alerts sign-up themselves, or not at all) · push past a no.

WHAT GOOD LOOKS LIKE

About 300 doors and 8 booked inspections a week, most of them held. Your numbers and your team's are on the Scoreboard every day.
